In one of the most outlandish bills introduced in Congress, and creating an unnecessary and duplicative $10 million debt for taxpayers, H.R. 1635 purports to set up a National Commission on Federal Marijuana Policy.

Introduced by the usual pro-marijuana Congressmen, this is a veiled attempt to overturn years of carefully considered and created drug policy by experts in the field. This Bill purports to question the decisions and decision-making processes of the very agencies created by Congress to perform these functions on behalf of the country. Adding insult to injury, the Bill authorizes the expenditure of $10 million of taxpayer money to pay for something already being done well by the federal government. In fact, the FDA (one of the primary targets of the reviews proposed by this Bill) is considered the gold standard of the world.

Marijuana is classified by the Drug Enforcement Administration as a Schedule I drug under the Controlled Substances Act, meaning it has been found to have no accepted medical use, is addictive, and can't be used safely even under a physician's care. The FDA, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, and the Drug Enforcement Administration have determined that marijuana is not medicine, a determination echoed by medical associations who advocate for patients.
